PREFACE.

This work has been compiled chiefly for those who have not sufficient time to devote to the study of those languages of India to which this Glossary pertains, and who yet, in the course of their reading of Indian subjects, feel the want of an explanation, in a small compass, of terms relating to the religion, manners, customs, &c, of the Hindū and Mussalmān peoples of India.

These terms are, it is true, to be found in excellent Urdū and Hindi dictionaries; but the latter are large and expensive works, and however essential to students of those languages, they would not be requisite for the majority of the readers to whom the present compilation appeals. For these the Roman character is used in this work. The Alphabets (in the same character), of the respective languages have been prefixed. At the same time, the students to whom we have referred will derive an advantage from having in a small compass, affording facility of reference, a collection of those particular terms to which this Glossary is confined. The compiler is indebted to various valuable Hindūstānī Dictionaries.

This Glossary was submitted to the late Dr. Rost, Librarian at the India Office, who expressed a very favourable opinion of the adaptability of the work to the end which the compiler had in view.

PREFACE

The compiler takes this opportunity of acknowledging his obligation to Professor BLUMHARDT, for kindly looking over the MS, and making some useful suggestions

It is possible, nay probable, that some errors in accentuation may have been overlooked, and for these the compiler must appeal to the indulgence of his readers

* "In pronouncing the names of the letters let it be remembered that the vowels are to be uniformly sounded as follows — The unmarked a is always short as a in woman, adrift, etc. ā is always long as a in arl; i is short as in pin; ī or ī̄ is long, as in police; u is short as u in bull, pull, etc., ū is the same sound lengthened and pronounced as u in rule, etc. e is sounded as ea in bear; o is always long as in no; ai is pronounced as ai in aisle; and au is sounded as in German and Italian or very nearly like our on in sound, or ow in cow. For these and further remarks on the pronunciation of the alphabet used (with sometimes slight modifications) in the north and east of Africa, in Turkey Arabia and Persia and by the Mussalmān portion of the people of India and Malacca and for the characters the student is referred to Forbes' Hindūstānī Grammar

2) "Allf, according to the orthography of the Arabs has no sound but that of its accompanying vowel" (Shakespeare's Hindūstānī Grammar)

* Allf is sounded a, i or u, according to the vowel written above or below it (Arabic Grammar by Paris 'As'-'Shadīq)

The vowel marks which are sounded after the consonants over or under which they are placed consist of three, viz;

(1) fatha, or zabar ^ˆ, written over the consonant, and having the sound of a short a.*

(2) kasra, or zer _˘, written under the consonant to which it belongs and having the sound of i in slip.

(3) ṛamma, or pesh ^ˆ, written over its consonant, and having the sound of u in pull, push, or more exactly of oo in foot, hood, &c.

* a, i or u, guttural. (Arabic Grammar by Faris Al-Shidīq).

† The Northambrian r, as in round (Do. Ed. Rev. H. G. Williams, B. D. formerly Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge) Sir William Jones (Persian Grammar) says of nīn and ḡhain—the first is considered as a consonant, and occasions any vowels with which it is connected to be pronounced as if from the chest." Indians pronounce ain very slightly. In this vocabulary we have represented the ain either at the commencement or end of a word by an inverted comma, 'as 'all, ma'.

For further information regarding the Hindī alphabet, and for the construction of the language, the student can consult KELLOGG'S Hindī Grammar. The numerals differ very slightly from those we have already given.

The characters of the Sanskrit letters differ considerably from those of the Urdū, the Arabic, and the Persian.

Rāma-chandra.. . . .	Son of Dasaratha, and conqueror of Lankā or Ceylon. He was the seventh avatār; when the deity descended for the purpose of destroying Rāvaṇa, who having obtained (for his devotion) a promise from Brahmā that he should not suffer death by any of the usual means, had become the tyrant and pest of mankind. The Devatās came in the shape of monkeys, as Rāvaṇa had gained no promise of safety from them; hence Hanumāna was Rāma's general. Rāma-chandra's mother's name was Kaushalyā. His younger brother Bharata was son of Kekayī, who was the cause of Rāma's going to the desert to perform devotions, on the banks of the Pampū nadī, insisting that her son should reign the fourteen years that Rāma employed in the devotions; while engaged in these, or during his sojourn in the forests accompanied by Lakshmana (his brother by Sumitrā), on an occasion of his absence, hunting, Rāvaṇa appeared as a beggar, and enticed away Sitā, the daughter of Janaka Rājā, who had promised to give her to any person who could break a certain bow, which was done by Rāmachandra. These incidents are related in Rāmāyaṇ &c. The story given there of the abduction of Sitā is, as follows; Rāma had drawn a circle round Sitā, and forbidden her to go

- beyond it, leaving Lakshmana to take care of her, but he hearing some noise which alarmed him for his brother, left her to seek him, then it was that Ravana appeared, enticed Sitā out of the circle (gandī), and carried her in his flying chariot. In the air Ravana was opposed by the bird Jaṭāyu, whose wings he cut and escaped. Rāmachandra reigned in Awadh (Ayodhyā), B C 1600.
- Rām-duhā'i
Rāmāyaṇ . An asseveration, by Rāma.

To be scorched by the sun, the name of the ninth Muhammadan month because when the ancient name given by the Pagans was changed this month happened in the season of the greatest heat. During this month Musalmāns are interdicted from eating drinking and conjugal intercourse, between the morning dawn and appearance of the stars at night. They believe that on the 27th of this month the Kūr'an began to descend and that every prayer offered up on that night will be complied with. Also prayers on the 19th 21st and 23rd days of this month are supposed to be peculiarly efficacious.

arms or legs. In spite, however, of this perplexing event, the work of Viswakarma has become celebrated throughout Hindostan, and pilgrims, from the remotest corners of India, flock at the time of the festivals of Juggernat'h to pay their adoration at his monstrous and unhallowed shrine. Between two and three thousand persons are computed to lose their lives annually on their pilgrimage to Juggernat'h. The temples of this deity being the resort of all the sects of Hindoos, it is calculated that not less than two hundred thousand worshippers visit the celebrated pagoda in Orissa yearly, from which the Brahmans draw an immense revenue. All the land within twenty miles round the pagoda is considered holy; "The classical scholar will compare the Phocian town of Crissa, but the most sacred spot is an area of about six hundred and fifty feet square, which contains fifty temples. The most conspicuous of these is a lofty tower, about one hundred and eighty-four feet in height, and about twenty-eight feet square inside, called the Bar Dewali, in which the idol and his brother, and sister Subhadra, are lodged. Adjoining are two pyramidal buildings. In one, about forty feet square, the idol is worshipped; and, in the other, the food prepared for the pilgrims is distributed. These buildings were erected, A.D. 1199. The walls are covered with statues, many of which are in highly indecent postures. The grand entrance is on the eastern side; and close to the outer wall stands an elegant stone column, thirty-five feet in height, the shaft of which is formed of a single block of basalt, presenting sixteen sides. The pedestal is richly ornamented. The column is surrounded by a finely sculptured statue of Hanuman, the monkey chief of the Ramayana. The establishment of priests, and others belonging to the temple, has been stated to consist of three thousand nine hundred families, for whom the daily provision is enormous. The holy food is presented to the idol three times a day. This meal lasts about an hour, during which time the dancing girls belonging to the temple exhibit their professional skill in an adjoining building. Twelve festivals are celebrated during the year, the principal of which is the Rat'h Jatra. Juggernut'h is styled the Lord of the World. His temples, which are also numerous in Bengal, are of a pyramidical form. During the intervals of worship they are shut up. The image of this god is made of a block of wood, and has a frightful visage, with a distended mouth. His arms, which, as he was formed without any, have been given to him by the priests, are of gold. He is gorgeously dressed, as are also the other two idols which accompany him. In a compartment in the temple of Rama, he is represented in company with Bala Rama and Subhadra, without arms or legs. The town of Juggernut'h is situated on the coast of the province of Orissa, in Lat 19 deg 49 min N, Long 85 deg, 54 min E. It is named, and usually called Pooree, and is inhabited chiefly by Brahmuns, and others connected with the pagoda. On the sea shore, eighteen miles to the northward of Juggernat'h, are the remains of an ancient temple of the sun, called, in English charts—the black pagoda. The greater part of the temple is in ruins, having been thrown down, apparently, by lightning or earthquake; but, from what remains, it appears to have been one of the most singular edifices ever constructed in India. Part of the tower, 120 feet high, is still standing, and the antechamber, or jung-mohun , about 100 feet high. They are built of immense blocks of stone and massive beams of iron, some of which are nearly a foot square, and from twelve to eighteen feet long. This temple, which has been long deserted, was built by a Rajah of Orissa, in 1241." (STOCKLLEN).

His combat with Isfaadlyār is famous in the east; it lasted two days: and, as the brazen body of his enemy was proof against his arrows, he at last killed him with his mace. He was son of Zāl, who was son of Sām, son of Narīmān. He was general to Kalkā'ūs, and considered by the Persians descended from Māmūn, son of Benjamin, son of Jacob. He overcame Afrūsiyāb, king of Turkhistān, who was joined by the Indians and Tartars: nevertheless, he fell into disgrace with his master, principally on account of his rejecting the religion of Zoroaster; and, it was upon this occasion that he killed Kalkā'ūs's son Isfaadlyār above mentioned. He was killed by the wound of an arrow in an engagement with Bahman (or Artaxerxes Longimanus) son of Isfaadlyār. Hence a hero is called Rustam.

APPENDIX.

Muhammadan Calendar.

The era from which Mussalmāns reckon corresponds with the date of their prophet's flight (called the Hijra) from Mecca to Medina. This is computed to have occurred on Friday the 12th of July, A.D. 622. Mussalmāns count time by lunar months of which there are twelve consisting of 354 days and nine hours very nearly. Their New Year's Day will thus fall every year about eleven days earlier than in the preceding year.

In order to find the Christian year corresponding to that of the Hijra, Forbes (vide Grammar p. 146) gives the following rule—

From the given number of Musalmān years, deduct three per cent, and to the remainder add the number 621.56, the sum is the period of the Christian æra at which the given current Musalmān year ends—This very simple rule is founded on the fact that 100 lunar years are very nearly equal to 97 solar years, there being only about eight days of difference. A more accurate proportion would be 101 lunar to 98 solar years, but this would lead to a less convenient rule for practical use.

When great accuracy is required, and when the year, month, and day of the Muhammadan æra are given, the precise period of the Christ in æra may be found very nearly, as follows—Rule. Express the Musalmān date in years and decimals of a year, multiply by .97, to the product add 621.56, and the sum will be the period of the Christian æra. This rule is exact to within a few days, and if in the Musalmān date the day of the week is given, as is generally the case, the very day is easily determined.

The Muhammadan or lunar months are made to consist of thirty and twenty nine days alternately but in a period of thirty years, it is found necessary to intercalate the last month eleven times so as to be reckoned thirty days instead of twenty nine. The months relating to the Arab names in all Muhammadan countries are as follows—

Hindū Calendar.

"The Hindūs reckon by solar years, and lunar-solar months. Their principal æra is that of the Kali-Yug, of which the year 4956 expired about the 11th of April, A.D. 1855, at which period their new year generally commences.

"The Hindū year is divided into twelve equal portions, which may be called solar months; but all festivals and dates are reckoned, not by these simple months, but by the duration of the moon which terminates in each. Hence, although the month Baisākḥ begins de jure about the 11th of April, it may have commenced de facto from one day to twenty-eight days sooner. When two new moons occur during one solar month, which happens once in three years, there is an intercalary month, and the month so intercalated receives the name of the one which preceded it, that is, of the solar month within which the two new moons may happen.

'Be it the era of the kali-yug, the Hindūs in the northern half of India reckon from the time of a renowned prince, by name Vikramāditya, who lived (or died) about 57 years before the commencement of our era. Another common era is that of a prince named Salavāhana, which commences 78 years after the birth of Christ.

Several other eras are in use in certain parts of the country, for a full account of which the reader may consult a profound work devoted entirely to the subject entitled kāla Saṅkalita, 1to Madras, 1825."

The Hindū Solar Months are as follows —

Balsakh	April—May.	kātik or kārlik	Oct—Nov.
Jeth	May—June	Aghan	Nov—Dec.
Asāḥ	June—July	Pūs	Dec.—Jan.

In former times and still partially now, small shells, called cowries, had an exchange value for fractional payments. The Maṅgāns, or Hindū shopkeepers, have generally a heap of cowries (S. Kauri) principally for distribution to beggars. To these, the majority of whom are professional, who swarm in India the shopkeepers give a handful of these shells. When the mendicant has collected a sufficient number he can exchange them for a little rice, bājri, or other grain. Silver, being the standard medium of circulation in India, the rate of exchange of the rupee with gold standard countries is subject to considerable fluctuation.

As the Indian Government have to make remittances to meet the heavy home charges to the Secretary of State in gold, the depreciation of silver is a constant source of anxiety to India.

Weights and Measures.

Goods are sold by the ser (the Calcutta factory ser weighs 1 lb. 13 oz. 13.86 drs. Acuir; the bāzār ser — 2 lbs. 0 —, 13.853 — —

A ser is generally reckoned (in small quantities) as 2 lbs. Acuir.

A Mānu = 40 ser.

The tolā is the denomination of a weight, consisting of a number of māshas, which varies in different parts of India.

The standard tolā, or sicca weight of Calcutta, is $12\frac{1}{2}$ māshas, agreeably to the following table.

4	Pank.....	1	Dhāu or Grain.

A gaz is used in measuring length; it is equivalent to a yard.

Distances are reckoned by Kos = to about 2 miles.

Forms of Address.

In respect of forms of address, Indians, and, indeed all Oriental peoples, are very punctilious. Their use of flowery expressions is proverbial, and apt to excite ridicule among Western nations, especially those in the north of Europe. Towards the south, in Italy, Spain, and Portugal, and even in France exaggerated terms of address are noticeable.

In India, Brahmans are addressed as Mahurūjī, Great King! Pandit (which also signifies a schoolmaster,) Dohe, Tiwari or Chaube (which signifies a Brahman acquainted with the four Vedas, and though this term like Pandit, was originally applied to learned Brahmans, ignorant men of this caste are still addressed as Chaubes and Pandits. Musalman Fakirs are addressed with Pir or Sūfī or Shūh; Hindū devotees, with Sā'in or Gnsā'in or Bhagat or Gurū; Rājputs with Thakur and Singh or Rāe. The two latter terms are also used among Sikhs. Moguls are addressed as Mirzā or Bēg, or Āghū or ħhwājā; Salyids, with Mir; Shakhīs, with Shakhī, Pashūns, with ħhūn; Doctors with Mulla or Maulana or Pandit; Merchants or Bankers, with Seth or Sah. The most common terms of respectful address are Māharaj, Jahān Panah (Refuge of the world!), Your Majesty!, Great King! ħhindawānd, Ji, Uyan or Nāhib; Sirī, or Rāhū, Lūlū, or Thakur; Sirī Master!, Worship!

Muhammad Ibrahim of Bombay laid down the following rules respecting the etiquette to be observed in the use of the pronouns

1. When the speaker and the person whom he addresses are of the same rank, each should speak of himself in the singular number, and address the other in the second person plural

2. A person of superior rank may speak himself in the singular number, and address the other in the second person plural, but this is not considered to be polite, nor is it thought correct to address even the lowest rank in the singular number

3. The pronouns of the third person may be used in the singular when speaking of any person in their presence, unless they be of superior rank, when they ought to be spoken of in the plural

4. When one person of rank addresses another of the same or superior rank, or speaks of him in his presence, it is most correct to make use of the respectful pronoun ūp, or the great man's title or some respectful phrase, ħhindawānd, your honour, buzurt, honour, highness, etc. and the like with the third person plural (of the pronouns and verbs), and when an inferior addresses a superior he ought at all times to use similar expressions of respect, suitable to the rank of the person addressed."

In writing letters, the person addressed is denoted, according to his rank, by some or other of the terms we have given above, but even as a mark of respect, persons are addressed in expressions which are quite incongruous with their position
